

WROTH, John Acton, 1830-1876

John Acton Wroth's birth was registered on 17 December 1830 at St Mary at the Quay Church, Ipswich, England. He was the only son of John, a brewer, and his wife Elizabeth (née Reeves) who died in 1845. There were four older sisters. When Wroth was 17 years of age he was apprenticed to Stephen Piper, a printer in the town of Ipswich. He forged orders on behalf of local jewellers and a bootmaker and also stole a large quantity of stationery from his employer. The fraud was detected and Wroth was charged at the Ipswich Court in August 1848.

Wroth was transported to the Swan River Colony on the Mermaid with over 200 other convicts and a contingent of Pensioner Guards and their families. On the voyage out he was given the role of school assistant.

Following his arrival at Fremantle in May 1851, Wroth was sent to the York Convict Hiring Depot as a probationer prisoner working as a clerk. He received his ticket-of-leave on 28 November 1851. The comptroller-general granted him a conditional pardon in 1853.

In March 1854 Wroth was sent to the Toodyay Hiring Depot, where he was appointed clerk of courts. In June 1854 Wroth married Bridget Josephine Ellis, a recent arrival at the Depot. Ellis was one of the emigrant girls brought out on the so-called "bride ships" to redress the shortage of young women in the colony. The couple had five sons and a daughter.

Wroth contracted typhoid, resulting in his death on 30 July 1876. His memory and contribution to Western Australia are honoured in one of the plaques laid down in St Georges Terrace as part of the state's 150th birthday celebrations.
